How to use this Partner Self-Evaluation Form

1. This document is mailed or emailed to the relevant partner.
2. The partner completes Section A by an agreed date and returns it to the Firm's managing partner.
3. The Firm's managing partner reviews Section A of the Self-Evaluation Form and sets up a conference with the partner concerned.
4. During the conference, agreements are reached as to correctness of both evaluation and goals. Any additions or changes are recorded in the appropriate sections. Section B is completed by the Firm's managing partner and agreement is reached with the reviewed partner as to conclusions and actions.
5. The Firm's managing partner will then make a presentation of the evaluations to the executive committee for its consideration when awarding salary/bonus or units of ownership (if applicable).

 Note: if there is no executive committee, consider the possibility of making a presentation to the other partners.

Further Information

This appraisal and evaluation approach should be used as part of the management system in a professional firm. At its lowest level, it can be applied to firms with only two partners - in such firms, partners would thus be appraising each other which, if approached with honesty, is likely to produce benefits in the business relationship.

The very characteristics that make great fee earners outstanding - those with vision, persistence, client obsession and a degree of intellectual arrogance - are exactly those traits that also make them high maintenance, non-compliant individuals. All too frequently, they have a huge disregard and dislike for management in all its forms. That's why regular appraisals are an effective way of measuring what is happening and setting targets for improvement in a professional firm.
